LABOUR DAY, 2014

By Joseph Maloney

International Vice-President – Canada

This Labour Day, let's take a few minutes to remember the challenges the men and women before us overcame to set the high standard of living many of us enjoy today.

As you turn the page on your Boilermaker calendar, you will see that September is Boilermaker History Month. Please take a moment to learn more about our great union's history by checking out www.boilermaker.ca/history.htm.

As we think about the past, it is also important to look at where we are going in the future. This union will always need new members to replace the members who leave the union. Those new members will have to step forward to serve the union in a variety of capacities. They will need to live up to the high standards and professionalism for which we are renowned. They will also have to continue the high level of commitment shown by our current members to getting the job done right the first time.

The International Brotherhood of Boilermakers will continue to represent our members at the highest possible standard.

To all Boilermakers and their families, please enjoy this long weekend. For those who will be working or travelling to work, please be safe!

Happy Labour Day!
